

Interviewer: Good afternoon. Can you tell me about the individual reported missing yesterday?

Witness: Sure. The person is John Doe. From what I understand, he was born in 1975, which makes him about 45 years old. Physically, he's around 5'10" and weighs roughly 160 pounds.

Interviewer: Was there anything notable about his health or routine that day?

Witness: Yes, actually. John mentioned earlier that he wasn't feeling well. He told me he'd missed his usual morning insulin shot. I know for a fact he has diabetes, and he's also had some issues with high blood pressure in the past.

Interviewer: That does sound concerning. Did he show any visible signs of distress?

Witness: He did seem more anxious than usual. He was talking about how he was worried he might miss his medication schedule altogether, which could be dangerous given his condition.

Interviewer: Where was he last seen?

Witness: I last saw him at the downtown bus station near Central Park. He was looking around nervously and was carrying a small bag—I suspect that bag might have held his medications.

Interviewer: Has his family or any authorities indicated that his case is urgent?

Witness: Yes, his family immediately flagged his case as urgent. They even mentioned that they had initiated an amber alert, especially considering his reliance on daily medication for his diabetes and blood pressure.

Interviewer: Is there any additional information that might help?

Witness: Not much else. I know he's well-known locally, and his past issues with keeping up with his medication have always been a concern for his family. They're really worried about his immediate well-being.
